Acknowledgments

The essays in the present volume were written over a number of years, in time stolen from other projects. I am grateful to the editors who prompted them and have given me permission to reprint them here: to Don Bruckner, Joanne Feit Diehl, Matthew Gilbert, Herbert Leibowitz, David Lynn, and, above all, Joseph Parisi. The map of American poetry presented in these pages is highly fragmentary, patched together in the usual manner of one who writes on assignment: one part editorial urging and one part accident for every third part of prior affinity. Many of the poets I most admire and consider most central to our common enterprise receive no mention here at all. Nevertheless, the cross-section seems to me a felicitous and a worthy one, more varied than I might have assembled on my own, resistant to easy generalization. I have learned a great deal from the poets represented here; their work has been a gift to me. As has the conversation of my friends and colleagues in poetry: David Baker, George Bornstein, Sharon Bryan, Peter Davison, Alice Fulton, Lawrence Goldstein, Jorie Graham, Marjorie Levinson, Thomas Lynch, Yopie Prins, Keith Taylor, Rosanna Warren, Patricia Yaeger. Steven Mullaney's is still the crucial judgment.
