Acknowledgments

While I have for over twenty years been interested in the prosopography—the study of the inhabitants—of ancient Pompeii, this project saw its serious beginnings during the 1995–96 academic year, when I was granted a sabbatical leave from my teaching duties at Indiana University. I had admittedly before that begun to put my thoughts to paper, but that year’s research and reflection convinced me that there was indeed this book for me to write. Likewise, final thoughts and changes were made possible thanks to a Summer Faculty Fellowship awarded me in 1998, again by Indiana University. For special support at this project’s beginning and end, I therefore gratefully thank my home institution.

At Indiana I have enjoyed the loyal support of two individuals in particular: Eleanor Winsor Leach, colleague and fellow “Pompeianista,” and James Werner Halporn, who even since his retirement has regularly prodded me forward. Almost before the project began, Lawrence Richardson, jr, my former teacher and internalized mentor, read a rambling, short typescript and pointed me in more productive, organized directions. To these people in particular I owe great debts of gratitude. The end result, of course, remains entirely my responsibility; in this world, alas, good counsel is as often rejected as taken.

Grateful acknowledgment is also made to Caratzas Publishing, Inc., for permission to include as the first chapter here a revised version of an article, “Augustans at Pompeii,” from The Shapes of City Life in Rome and Pompeii: Essays in Honor of Lawrence Richardson, jr on the Occasion of His Retirement, edited by H.B. Evans and M.T. Boatwright (New Rochelle 1996). Ayer Company Publishers has permitted as figure 18 here reproduction of the illustration, “Façade of the house of Epidius Rufus, restored,” from August Mau’s Pompeii: Its Life and Art, translated by F.W. Kelsey, second edition (New York 1902). My analysis of the career of Alleius Nigidius Maius earlier appeared as the article “Cn. Alleius Nigidius Maius and the Amphitheatre: Munera and a Distinguished Career at Ancient Pompeii" in Historia 46 (1997): 434–47, and thanks are due Franz Steiner Verlag Wiesbaden GmbH for permission to reproduce it in part here. Finally, Liselotte Eschebach and Jürgen Müller-Trollius have graciously granted me permission to reproduce the overall plan of Pompeii as well as twenty-five detailed plans of city blocks from their recent volume Gebäudeverzeichnis und Stadtplan der antiken Stadt Pompeji (Cologne 1993), which includes Müller-Trollius' updated version of the master plan of Pompeii by Hans Eschebach.
