

✿ Acknowledgments

I WISH TO THANK first William V. Harris and J. Rufus Fears for the intellectual inspiration and model that their work has provided me. I owe a great debt to them both. James Rives, David Konstan, John Pollini, Nicholas Horsfall, and Donald Kyle have all provided comment, correction, and encouragement in varying proportions as my obstinacy or enlightenment demanded. To the anonymous reviewer at the University of Michigan Press, who offered detailed advice and criticism, I am immeasurably grateful. Thanks are due as well to Christina Huemer and the staff at the American Academy in Rome. Their help and the resources of the library have transformed this work. My colleagues at Southern Methodist University (SMU) know how I rely on them and draw upon their support; they have made me very happy here. To James Hopkins, my chairman at SMU, I convey my thanks for his encouragement and support, both moral and practical. Billie Stovall and Curt Holleman have provided extraordinary scholarly resources for me at SMU.

The pleasant debts for friendship and frank criticism I owe in full to many. I wish particularly to thank Sarah Cox, Kathleen Wellman, Alexis McCrossen, Pamela Patton, Jane Elder, Julia Dyson, Stephen Shepherd, Tom Knock, Lisa Unterseher, Elizabeth Haluska Rausch, and Dennis Gray.

Last but deeply felt, I offer my thanks to my family, Alison Morey, Richard Barden, Elizabeth Barden Ackerman, and Scott Barden, for their genuine interest in the arcana of my research and for joining me in my travels and adding so much pleasure to my work. To Michael, vir indulgentissimus, and to Katherine, puella prima et optima, I dedicate this book with love.
