

Bibliography

The list below, though far from exhaustive, is designed to aid the reader interested in further research in American political science history. This bibliography includes works in the following five areas:

- I. General book-length commentaries and histories about political and social science in America written before 1945, including those works written in a particular period, or by or about a particularly important figure. Also included are major works that influenced the writing of political science history.
- II. General book-length commentaries and histories about political and social science in America written after 1945, including those works written about a particular period or figure in political science's past.
- III. Selected articles that are commentaries and/or histories of political and social science in America, written before 1945.
- IV. Selected articles that are commentaries and/or histories of political and social science, written after 1945.
- V. Disciplinary classics—book-length works that provide important historiographical positions and claims in the context of writing about another topic, or works that have particularly influenced those who have written about the history of political science.
