

Contents

Preface	vii
1 How Did We Get Here from There?	I
Introducing the Problem	1
The Cosmopolitanist Debates	9
The Jew in Contemporary Theories of Cosmopolitanism	12
Nomads, Gypsies, Jews	17
Jews and the Nation-State	28
2 Moving About: Cosmopolitanism from Jews in Coaches to Jews on Trains	31
The Enlightenment Imagines Cosmopolitan Jews	31
Writers in Coaches	42
Jews Writing Their Own Cosmopolitanism	61
3 “Everyone Is Welcome”: The Contradictions of Cosmopolitanism in the Imperial Worlds of Austro-Hungarian and Wilhelmine Jewry	69
From Vienna to Berlin and Beyond	69
Vienna, Zionism, and Cosmopolitanism	73
Prague: On the Fringes of Empire	91
Berlin: Another Empire	100
4 Jewish Cosmopolitanism and the European Idea, 1918–1933	113
After the Deluge	113
Stefan Zweig: The Model European	120
Joseph Roth’s Hotel Patriotism	127
Lion Feuchtwanger: The Empire Strikes Back	137
Cosmopolitanism Tottering on the Brink of Catastrophe	142

5	“The World Will Be Your Home”: Cosmopolitanism under National Socialism and in Exile	144
	The Revolution of 1933	144
	Thomas Mann and Egypt	145
	Joseph in Sigmund Freud’s Egypt	159
	Heidegger’s Rootless Jew	162
	Zweig’s Erasmus in Exile: The Cosmopolitan par Excellence	165
	Roth and Zweig: Idealizing the Austro-Hungarian Empire	170
	Zweig’s Brazil : The Farthest Exile	174
	Lion Feuchtwanger’s History in Exile , the Josephus Trilogy	182
6	Rootless Cosmopolitans: German Jewish Writers and the Stalinist Purges	187
	The Left in World War II and Thereafter	187
	Communism, National Socialism, and the Jews	188
	Writing the Stalinist Purges: Alice Rühle-Gerstel, Arthur Koestler, and Manès Sperber	197
	The Left and the Stalinist Purges after 1945: Rudolf Leonhard, Peter Weiss, and Stefan Heym	213
7	Russian Jews as the Newest Cosmopolitans	223
	Rooted German Cosmopolitans?	223
	In Germany, Gogol Is Not Sholem Aleichem	226
	In America, Nabokov Really Is Not Sholem Aleichem	243
8	Walls and Borders: Toward a Conclusion	255
	Notes	263
	Works Cited	289
	Index	321